

Awakening Desire

When you lose your keys you say, "I forgot where I put the keys." Eventually you find them and it's no big deal. We forget like that with a lot of things i.e. birthdays, dental appointments, past events, etc. Most of the time the results of that type of forgetting are not crucial.

But if you get a severe knock on the head you might get amnesia where you could possibly forget everything that really matters i.e. who you are, your name, who your loved ones are, where you live, and what you do for a living. In that case, amnesia is very problematic and very scary. But most of the time, people recover from their amnesia because it is temporary.

Then there is Alzheimer's disease that is so tragic because in this disease people forget and they don't remember at all the things that matter i.e. who their spouse is, who they are, who their children are, what their life is about, and what they desire. For those who have a loved one with this disease it's so discouraging because that loved one does not remember at all.

We all tend, I think, live our lives somewhere between amnesia and Alzheimer's. We sometimes remember who we are, what we desire, what life is about, what our glory is, and what really matters, but most of the time we forget and lose touch with the things that really count and bring lasting joy, life, and purpose.

I suggest going deeper into one thing that you will find really, really helpful in remembering the things that matter and count and getting a whole lot closer to God and what he intends for you in this life you are living.

That one thing is to give some real attention to awakening your true God given desires.

I suggest opening the "How Get in touch with your desires" document. Then take the time to answer the questions. This process will awaken your desires. You will get the most from this if you revisit these questions several times and add to your answers. I suggest saving this to your computer, iPad, or Iphone and giving it your best shot.

In His Adventure with you,

Reese
